

Staying Healthy In Rideshares and Taxis

Common rideshare services such as Uber and Lyft provide their own set of recommendations and requirements to riders. Those aside, here are some best practices for staying safe in a shared vehicle.

Mask up. The inside of a vehicle can be close quarters, especially if sharing your ride with a driver and other strangers.

Limit passengers. If possible, choose a ride option that ensures you'll have ample space to properly distance. If alone, sit in the rear seat diagonal from the driver.

Improve ventilation. Ask your driver to open the windows or set the air conditioning on non-recirculation mode.

Avoid surfaces. Avoid contact with high-touch surfaces, except where unavoidable. Wipe surfaces down if disinfecting wipes are available, use a hand sanitizer or wash hands immediately after touching handles, and avoid accepting free water or other items a driver offers.

Avoid food & drink. Save that snack or drink for your destination if you can. Refraining from eating and drinking allows you to always utilize that mask.
